"From Humanities to Ecology”

A distinguished literary scholar explores the current state of the humanities, considering especially the decline of literature including its newer subjects. Professor Miyoshi looks back to the beginning of the university, tracing conspicuous major changes, both academic and social, and then returns in his lecture to the current crisis in commodified higher education and culture in general. Environmental studies is proposed as a way out of the crisis and as a reaffirmation of human existence itself.

Masao Miyoshi is Hajime Mori Professor Emeritus of Japanese Language and Literature and Professor Emeritus of English and Comparative Literature at the University of California, San Diego.
